WASHINGTON CITY D.C

SATURDAY OCTOBER 19.th.1850

THE TWO ROADS TO WEALTH.

'What a fine thing it is to be rich!' exclaimed Charles Ashton, as he passed Squire Wilkins' great house.

'A fine thing indeed,' replied his friend Frank May, 'provided—'

'Provided what?'

'Provided we could have a few other good things with it.'

'Other good things! why man money will buy all the good things in the world.'

'Not quite,' replied Frank. 'To be sure it will buy some small matters which are convenient, but there are things of greater value that it will not buy.'

'Such as what?' interrupted his friend.

'Such as health, happiness, and a clear conscience.'

'Well Frank, I suppose it would not be exactly the right coin for these commodities, but I'll tell you of one nice article which it will buy.'

'And what is that?'

'A wife' replied Frank, that's the only article in the world which I should rather have than buy.'

'Well Frank, you are a man of independent feelings, but I'm afraid you'll never be a man of independent property.'

'Why Charles, what makes you think so? I like money, and I mean to get my share, provided I can do it honestly.'

'As you will be too much hindered with scruples to make any head way in the world. My choice is, "Go ahead, but er nice."

'And I,' said Frank, 'should as lief have nothing to do, but sigh, as to have nothing to enjoy but wealth.'

Here the friends parted, one to his counting-house, and the other to his courting. These two young men lived in the pleasant village of H——, on the banks of the Connecticut. Charles Ashton was a merchant and Frank May was a mechanic. They were both what the world calls 'very fine young men.' But the world is superficial when we look down in the heart. It is the prerogative of one Eye alone to look on the secret springs of action, in that Eye the difference between the two characters was very great.

Both applied themselves with all diligence to their respective callings, and with regard to business.

Frank May considered that every dollar should be gained, and only honestly put honestly. As for Charles Ashton, he had his own purposes, and that was to become wealthy—unencumbered by scruples about ways and means.

'All in a rich suit before I die!' said he to himself one night, as he was studying his ledger, the only book in the world that he thought really interesting. He was untiring in his application to business, and if he did not actually cheat, he made what are called 'pretty fair bargains.' 'Hard and honest,' was his motto, which some think means exactly the same.

He had weighed the temptation of a many a straight, dull turnpike, where there are so many driving by and so many trying to overtake you, that you are blinded with dust, while my path is through a green shady lane, among murmuring brooks and singing birds.

'Ah! good-by to you Frank,' replied his friend, you are welcome to your birds and brooks and shady lane; I like the turnpike best, and don't mind getting a little gold dust in my eyes, provided the rest settles in my pockets.'

Though Charles spoke so gaily as he turned away, there was a still smaller voice which whispered to his heart, and told him Frank was right, and he was wrong. But as this monitor had not been listened to when its tones were loud, was it to be expected that its whispers would be heard?

Among the poor neighbors who shared Frank's kind attentions, was one whose peculiarly lone and desolate condition, gave her a strong claim to sympathy and kindness. The widow Green as she was commonly called, had seen better days; but she had lost her husband, her children, and her property. One after another, she had laid her little ones in the grave, till only two remained, a son and a daughter. All the generous sympathies of Frank's nature were moved, when that only son was cut down just as he had reached an age at which his poor mother might begin to lean upon him. He resolved in the fulness of his heart to make this widow his especial care and do all in his power to supply the place of her lost son. He was unwearied in his attentions, and though time was money with him, he gave it freely to provide for her comfort.—The widow Green had, as I have said, an only daughter—this was all that had been saved from the wreck of her earthly happiness: A rich treasure was this daughter—at least so thought the widow—and so thought another.

Now I beg the reader not to call in question the disinterestedness of Frank's attentions to the widow, for I do assure you, that when he resolved to be a son to her, he had no idea of a literal fulfilment. But benevolence sometimes meets with unexpected rewards.

Mary Green was at this time, about nineteen years old. I suppose you expect me to say that she was the prettiest girl in the village, no such thing, there were a dozen as pretty, perhaps prettier, but I dont believe there was one who had a kinder heart, or more sweet and gentle manners. Though while her features were at rest, you would not say she was handsome, but when they were lighted up with thought and feeling, as they always were in conversation, you would acknowledge there was beauty there. And the very best kind of beauty too—that which will not fade. This was just the sort of beauty to take with Frank. He found too, that her views of duty in the great end of life, accorded with his own. That the afflictions of her family had matured her character and produced a chastened and elevated spirit which eminently fitted her for the companionship of one whose great desire was to be good and do good.

One evening Frank and Mary had been taking a long walk, it was a bright moonlight evening of autumn, and they reached home just as the village clock struck nine. They stopped before the little gate which was hung with a string.

'Well I have been thinking Mary—hem!'—here he stopped and worked away for some seconds on the string. It had got into a hard knot, I suppose.

'I have been thinking,' he began again, and there he stayed so long that Mary wondered what he had been thinking about, and whether he would ever be done thinking.

'I have been thinking Mary, that—' At he did now advance one word further, he would probably have got out the whole sentence, but just then widow Green, who had been sitting at the window and seeing Frank working so long at the gate, the kind, officious old lady came out to see what in the world was the matter with that 'are string.'

THE HUNTRESS

WASHINGTON CITY D. C

SATURDAY OCTOBER 19.....1860

OUR CITY PAPERS.

From the courtesy and kindness of the press in this city without distinction, toward us, it would be unpardonable to overlook such politeness, while bestowing a passing notice upon it is other cities, and without ceremony we commence with

THE NATIONAL INTELLIGENCER.

The Editors of this time-honored paper holds on one course without change or turning to the right or the left. Let Kingdoms fall, or republics rise—let party-strife rage, or subside in peace and in war, the Intelligencer glides along smoothly and porsues the even tenor of its way; while as its name bespeaks it—has a large department of National Intelligence. It is whig in politics, firm and undeviating, but moderate and gentlemanly in reference to the opinions of others. When assailed by partizan Editors they meet them with gentleness and forbearance, and in many cases with silent contempt.

These gentlemen, Messrs. Gales & Seaton, have every qualification to fit them for their calling. Highly accomplished and winning in their manners, with a fund of knowledge and experience obtained from the highest sources in any country,—generous as Princes and to the poor, the stranger and the destitute, they bestow their last cent! we have seen this and more! We were present once when a traveller who had come a great ways, had been sick, and spent all his money, came into the Mayor's office, and as he related his case, the soft eye of Col. Seaton [then the Mayor] became moist, and having just emptied his pockets to another poor creature, he sent out and borrowed a dollar for the stranger. We would rather be this man than the owner of the mines of California.

These gentlemen might have amassed great fortunes but for that generosity that knows no bounds. But they have laid up their treasure where "moths do not corrupt nor thieves break through and steal." These are the true christians, and the all-seeing eye will never suffer them to want.

We have extended these remarks as due to the Editors of a paper coeval with the city itself, and has done more to promote its prosperity, to aid its growth, to sooth, and console its citizens in their darkest hour, and revive their sinking spirits, than either Congress or the administration. Indeed the talent and the sussive tone of their paper was, and is now, looked up to generally as the standard paper of the country.

THE UNION.

Our venerable friend Mr. Ritchie, whom we have known many years, we are sorry to see has had some trouble in regard to his public contract for printing—we trust however, he may not be a loser. He has many friends in Congress, in the House and in the Senate likewise. Senator Dickinson of New York spoke warmly in his favor, and a more able or persevering man, or one of more influence is rarely to be met with, when once he is enlisted. Mr. D. is a man of great benevolence and sympathy, as well as judgment.

Meantime Mr. Ritchie goes it strong for the Democracy, and though he sometimes nevers the less, says things that does not exactly, generally coincide with our opinion, yet in the main he is true to his country, and holds with the Union.

For his age he has more energy than almost any other man, and is perhaps the oldest, the best, and one of the most gentlemanly Editors in the union. His greatest fault (if it be one) is, that he is too generous for his own good. But great allowance must be made for human nature in spite of policy—for a man whose benevolent heart is ever open to the cries of humanity and the wants of his fellowman, and such a heart has Mr. Ritchie. He is a man of many virtues, and without a single stain on his reputation. The following may give some idea of his devotion to the Union:

"THE ULTRAISTS.

'The New York Express has some sensible speculations about the present crisis. It holds the Sewardites not only responsible for the divisions in the whig party of New York, but for the passage of the obnoxious resolutions adopted at Syracuse, and the dissensions which they are calculated to produce. It contends that Mr. Seward was not entitled by his course to the compliment he has received from them, and that he is only encouraged by their remarks to prosecute his 'higher-law' heresies and his mischievous schemes of abolition. The Express also expresses some fears about the stability of the Union if this agitation be kept up, and denounces in indignant terms the incendiary movements which are supposed to be in agitation.

The Express regrets the dissatisfaction which still pervades the public mind, the clamors in the South, and the agitation in the North:

'In a word, the ultraists are not satisfied; and if agitation can bring about a revival of the war of words, and almost war of deeds, through which the country has just passed, they are resolved, regardless of all consequences, to begin the fight anew.

'In the history of sectional strife and border feuds, we can recall nothing more atrocious than the means used to accomplish this end."

(Union.

These people it may be seen are bent on bloodshed.

THE REPUBLIC.

This is whig,—the Editor Mr. John O. Sargent, is a gentleman of fine talents, and possesses a fund of general information. He is at no loss upon any subject, nor is his vigilence less than his abilities—he is always upon the elert, whether politics, morality, government literature, news or anecdote—nothing comes amiss to him.

We had written thus far when by accident, we had the pleasure of a personal interview with Mr. Sargent himself, for the first time. He is quite a young man to have been an Editor as long as he has, and is just such a looking man as we had supposed him to be, from his enlightened sheet. He is a light figure of common height, has a fine intelligent countenance of elegant manners, with much personal beauty of expression. His face is round, fair and moderately full. His deep smooth, solid forehead denotes intellect and suavity, and his full azure eye has an expression of magic sweetness, and bespeaks a mind at once cheerful, mild and firm. Success to him. He was educated in Cambridge, Massachusetts, and is a native of the same State.

We found two young men in his office who seemed to be clerks. They were quite genteel looking men, and appeared to be very expert with the pen. Success to them too.

THE SOUTHERN PRESS.

We flattered ourself that this paper would have attracted more attention than it seems to do. We have never seen it mentioned in any of our exchange papers more than once or twice.

It is ably edited, that is, the language is chaste, concise, and erudite, and the sentiments are lofty and independent—but it requires clear reasoning to convince the judgment; one cannot be so much interested in it, coming as it does suddenly upon us—from the fact that much of the paper is taken up with correspondents, addresses, meetings, &c. &c. from the South, which however, well meant as a defence of 'Southern rights,' yet the thought of desolution cools ones ardour.

We had the pleasure of seeing one of the editors, Mr. Fisher—he is as plain as my hand, with a placid smiling countenance. He is a tall and rather slender figure, with a fair, oval, intelligent face. His features and mien are studious and tranquil as the grave. His finely developed forehead, and mild blue dove eye, is very prepossessing—while his countenance is is meekness and humility itself.

Upon joking Mr. F. for his want of Southern animation, he said he was 'a Quaker,' and if we are not mistaken, a native of Philadelphia.

There is another Editor present, and hundreds perhaps throughout the Southern States. The following is a specimen of the Editorial—

"THE 'NATIONAL' AND THE 'SECTIONAL' WHIGS.

We had confidently expected a full exposition of the actual position which the two wings of the party would hereafter occupy, from the two organs of the Whig party in this city, and opened both yesterday with much curiosity to see the programme of the performance, but our hopes were fallacious. Vainly did we scan the Intelligencer—idly did we pore over the crowded columns of the Republic, for even an allusion or a reference to this great crevasse in the Empire State.

'Silence slept brooding o'er the vast abyss.'

as though some Curtius intended immolating himself, that the yawning chasm might close without leaving even a fissure for the nominations to fall through. But the augury was an erroneous one, for on opening the New York prints another babel of discordant tongues broke forth, and convinced us that 'mischief was still a foot' on that 'free soil.'

The papers from that section are filled with suggestions and speculations about the split. The seceders have issued an address, repudiated the nominations of the Convention, and called another Convention to be held in Utica on the 17th day of October.

They are evidently endeavoring to retrieve their indiscretion, and make the best of a bad bargain by contending that they, and not the majority of the delegates to the State Convention, are the real 'Simon Pures' of New York Whiggery.

With an appreciation of the great importance of names in party contests which are often more potent far than principles, they have called for another convention—denominating themselves the National and their opponents the Sectional division of the party—in the hope of yet effecting a division in favor of the administration, against whom Mr. Seward seems stubbornly to have set his face. Like his famous ante-type, Robespierre, the man of 'the Mountain' in the French Revolutionary Convention, who crushed under his heel first the Girondins and his rivals, Senator Seward has silently woven his web around Mr. Buer and his 'conservatives' representing the Administration.'

And last though not least,

THE GLOBE.

This paper once the vehicle of all manner of fraud and baseness—the shield of crime and infamy, and thereby established the most perfect system of lawless tyranny, plunder, and oppression that ever existed, under the name of Democracy—is now one of the purest and most beautiful papers we have, entirely neuter in politics, and the best printed paper in the city. It is now edited by Mr. James C. Pickett, who has resided some time in the city, though we never had the pleasure to see him. He seems to be a man of liberal education & extensively informed, acquainted with history and all sorts of accomplishments that fit men for the head of a press,—and as for Mr Rives, the sole proprietor of the Globe, he can write himself sometimes.

The object of the establishment however is merely the Congressional Globe, a choice publication of the speeches and acts of Congress. But that 'big R.' is a saucy wag, and if he does not mind, we shall tell Mrs. R. upon him.

It is good for indigestion sneer as they will. See Dr. Green 41 street, next door to Mrs. McDaniels.

A CHINESE DINNER.

A dinner given at Singapore in 1823, by a Chinese merchant, to a number of European merchants and Naval officers, consisted of the following dishes, viz.—Soups, of birds nests—frogs—ducks livers, a dish prepared of Elephant's tails, with sauce of Lizards eggs, a dish of stewed Porcupine served up with a platter full of snipes eyes, the fat of Turtle, fish maws and seaweed; all garnished around the border with Peacocks combs. This last dish cost $200 dollars. The desert was jellies made of the Rhinoceros horn, fruits from Malacca and Ichio, and wines from Europe, &c. &c. The party remained at this table until three o'clock the next morning, when all retired in perfect harmony.

THE BLESSINGS OF PRIESTHOOD.

The property of the French Priesthood in the 17th century, consisted of $3,000,000 of Lordships, in which they had the power to exercise political justice. They had also 24,000 villages, 7,000 vineyards, besides Tithes from many more, 125,000 fish ponds, and 90,000 acres of meadow. They consumed annually, 4,500,000 measures of pure wheat, [equal to 45,000,000 of bushels,) and 9 million barrels of flour—900,000 measures of oats—800,000 of barley—280,000 of peas; 180,000 fat capons, 560,000 of hens, 600,000 of patridges, 12,000 fat oxen, 12,000 fat wethers, and 7,000,000 of eggs.

THE GLOBE,
Congressional, gricultural, and Literay Newspaper.

The Editors of the Congressional Gobe propose a new publication. To deserve the patronage which Congress has accorded to their reports of its debates, in receiving and making the Globe the official register, they intend to add promptitude to whatever merit has hitherto recommended the work. They will publish a Daily Globe, to record the proceedings and debates as they occur, and a Congressional Globe periodically as heretofore, embodying the reports of Congress separate from the miscellaneous matter which will accompany them in the daily print. To fill the sheet of the daily newspaper, it is designed to gather the news from all quarters, and complete the contents by drawing from every source what ever may be of most interest among literary novelties, and of greatest utility in science, art, or agriculture. For material the leading journals and periodicals of France and Great Britain, treating of such subjects will be consulted and it is hoped, advantageously used. Original essays, especially on topics connected with agriculture, wil be obtained from the most enlightened and practical men of our country.

The Appendix will embrace the revised speeches separately and the messages of the President of the United States and the reports of the Heads of the Executive Departments.

The Congressional Globe and appendix will be published as fast as the proceedings of Congress will make a number Subscribers may expect one number of each a week during the first four weeks of a session and two or three numbers of each a week afterwards, until the end of the session.

THE GLOBE,
Congressional, gricultural, and Literary Newspaper.

The Editors of the Congressional Gobe propose a new publication. To deserve the patronage which Congress has accorded to their reports of its debates, in receiving and making the Globe the official register, they intend to add promptitude to whatever merit has hitherto recommended the work. They will publish a Daily Globe, to record the proceedings and debates as they occur, and a Congressional Globe periodically as heretofore, embodying the reports of Congress separate from the miscellaneous matter which will accompany them in the daily print. To fill the sheet of the daily newspaper, it is designed to gather the news from all quarters, and complete the contents by drawing from every source what ever may be of most interest among literary novelties, and of greatest utility in science, art, or agriculture. For material the leading journals and periodicals of France and Great Britain, treating of such subjects will be consulted and it is hoped, advantageously used. Original essays, especially on topics connected with agriculture, wil be obtained from the most enlightened and practical men of our country.

The Appendix will embrace the revised speeches separately and the messages of the President of the United States and the reports of the Heads of the Executive Departments.

The Congressional Globe and appendix will be published as fast as the proceedings of Congress will make a number. Subscribers may expect one number of each a week during the first four weeks of a session and two or three numbers of each a week afterwards, until the end of the session.

Complete indexes to the Congressional Globe and appendix, will be sent to subscribers soon after Congress adjourns.

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST
UNRIVALLED INDUCEMENTS FOR 1850

A MAMMOTH PAPER.
DEVOTED TO MORALITY, PURE LITERATURE, FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC NEWS, AGRICULTURE, SCIENCE, ART AND AMUSEMENT.

This paper contains from one-fourth to one half more than the generality of two Dollar city weeklies.

The Proprietors of the SATURDAY EVENING POST return their sincere thanks to their friends and the public for the patronage extended to them since the enlargement of their paper, and respectfully solicit a continuance of the same. The belief expressed in their last Prospectus, that the POST is destined to take its stand at the very head of the weekly press, is fast becoming realized. The reason of this is in a great degree, to be found in the stand the POST has always taken against the immoral literature of the day. The public have felt, in the language of the North American and United States Gazette, of this city, that "The Post has done much towards correcting the taste of the newspaper reading public."

The proprietors of the Saturday Evening Post, in coming before the public with a new Prospectus, would respectfully solicit attention to what they have done in the past, as a guarantee for their promises of the future. They may safely say that no other paper in America has given to its readers so large and well chosen an amount of all kinds of reading, elegant and useful imaginative and practical, during the last year as the Post. To say nothing of other tales and sketches, what paper has laid before its subscribers during the past year four such novelets as 'Henery Benson,' 'The child Stealer,' 'Isabel Denison,' and The Deserted Wife?'

And the proprietors of the Post are determined that if possible the coming year shall be even a more brilliant one than the past. To begin with they have already secured the following original contributions, which will be published, and other choice pictures of life during the coming year:

The Baymounts: A Novelet by Miss Leslie, author of "Mrs. Washington Potts, &c., &c.

The Bride Of An Evening, A Tale Of Western Life A Novelet, by Mrs Southworth, author of "retribution," 'The Deserted Wife,' &c

The Old Astrologer or, The Prophecy Fulfilled, A Novelet by T. S Arthur, author of 'Agnes or the Possessed,' the Child stealer,' &c,

The Belle And the Blue, A Novelet by Caroline Lee Hentz, author of "The Mob Cap," 'Aunt Patty's scrup Bag
